FIT = Move + Match + Support
A good FIT is characterized by the following conditions:
• Allows the user to move through a variety of postures
• Matches user shape and size
• Properly supports the user and their work tools while performing their tasks

MOVE
It has long been known that the human body was designed to move. The circulatory system, joints and spinal discs require movement for healthy functioning. As you move, your muscles help to pump blood through your body, which delivers nutrition to, and removes waste from, your tissues. In the absence of good blood flow, not only is food delivery reduced, waste products build up in your tissues that over time makes your muscles feel tired and sore. Movement also contributes to proper lubrication of your joints and proper nutrition of your spinal discs. Ergonomically sound workstation designs embrace this increasingly important need for movement.

MATCH
Physically fitting into a chair or workstation is often the first thought that comes to mind when people think of FIT, and perhaps is the easiest condition for a user to judge. You know when your feet are dangling, or if the seat feels too deep or if the work surface seems too high. When physical shape and size are accommodated it helps contribute to good blood flow by minimizing pressure points. Also furniture that is properly matched to your body helps minimize awkward or extreme postures, for example raised shoulders, thereby minimizing unnecessary muscular effort.

SUPPORT
Proper support ensures proper alignment of the upper body, which includes the neck, shoulders and upper back. When these body parts are properly supported while performing tasks, the muscles are in the best position to aid breathing. If your lower back is not properly supported when seated, it either straightens or curves the wrong way. Support for the lower back should allow the pelvic to be tilted slightly forward when seated to help maintain the natural lumbar curve posture. Stabilization of joints goes hand in hand with proper alignment. Well designed and properly used furniture goes a long way to contributing to proper support.

Ergonomics is the study that deals with the interaction between humans and their activities. It is the practice of designing an environment to adapt to the characteristics of the people who are within it.

Studies have shown that productivity in the work place increases as a direct consequence of seating built with ergonomic considerations.

A well designed chair is comfortable and it supports the key areas of the body without restricting movement. After the common cold, more people see doctors about back pain than any other ailment. Almost 80% of the worldwide population will suffer back or neck pain at one time or another. These conditions receive great attention from doctors, chiropractors, physiotherapists and other health care professionals, yet there is no one simple cure.

It is important to take care of your back to keep it healthy. Improving your posture and reducing the strains of everyday living will help reduce back pain and help you maintain a healthier back as you grow older.

Maximize Your Ergonomic Seating

Every Global and Offices To Go chair is built with features that are ergonomically designed to promote proper posture and provide maximum comfort. While fully supporting your body, these features also allow you to adjust your chair to fit YOU.

Always select a chair that is designed for the type of work you perform and make certain the chair is comfortable for the length of time spent using it. Ensure that the seat and back cushions are contoured to fit your body which will help eliminate pressure points. An ergonomically designed chair should allow changing positions easily. As you work, reposition yourself throughout the day to reduce strain and stress on specific muscle groups. If you change job functions, adjust your chair to fit the new task.

Proper ergonomic seating should help eliminate many of the work related injuries that result from poor posture and poorly designed seating.
